

Nevada Cancer Institute

If you've always imagined that transactional work is dull, an externship at the Legal and Governmental Affairs Department at the Nevada Cancer Institute may change your mind. A typical day at the office involves a wide variety of issues, such: life sciences, labor and employment, contract, healthcare, real property and tax. There are always contracts to review and longer term projects to work on. However, issues demanding quick response arise on a frequent and regular basis. How should a violent patient situation be handled? Should a positive drug test on a job applicant be reported to the applicant's licensing board? If a donor wants to give something other than money, how must the transaction be processed? Should a charitable lottery application be filed for a fundraising raffle of items? How should a perceived or potential conflict of interest be handled? This externship is a wonderful way to be exposed to a wide variety of legal areas and to learn the business operations implications of legal guidance and decisions.
